

Dropping in for a fish supper

A white-tailed eagle shows off its accuracy as it dives in to find itself a fish supper. It was caught on camera by the Dutch photographer Harry Eggans as it took a Pollock from a fjord in Lauvsnes, Norway. The birds which have a wingspan of over 2m, are native to northern Europe, including parts of Scotland and Asia.